

He Tohu Ora: Cultural engagement

Downloaded from <https://www.canterburywellbeing.org.nz/he-tohu-ora/#link-cultural-engagement> on 21/05/2024 1:41 AM

Cultural identity is strengthened when there is access to not only cultural heritage but also opportunities for cultural engagement, such as speaking te reo Māori or taking part in kapa haka [5]. Kapa haka, for example, has been identified as having strong links to culture and Māori identity, as well as providing a social, strengths-based environment for rangatahi (youth) [25].

Te Kupenga asked respondents how important it was to be involved in things to do with Māori culture. There were five response options, ranging from very important to not at all important [12].

This indicator presents the proportion of respondents who reported it was quite/very important to be engaged in Māori culture.

In 2018, just under a third (32.9%) of respondents from Canterbury reported it was quite or very important being engaged in Māori culture, compared with 45.3% of respondents from New Zealand overall.
